What is Employment Advocacy?

Employment advocacy means speaking up about work issues

Employment advocacy helps people to know about their their rights at work

Employment advocacy helps people to know about different types of work

Employment advocacy helps people to know about their rights with job support organisations

Employment advocacy is for people with disability who:

want help to plan for work with supports work in supported employment are worried about something at work want help with things that are stopping them from working

How do Employment Advocates Help?

An employment advocate is a person who helps with work issues

An employment advocate will listen to you

An employment advocate might help you to learn about your options

An employment advocate might help you to think about your options

You decide what you want to do

An employment advocate can help you to make a plan

You can choose to speak up for yourself

An employment advocate can support you to speak up for yourself

You can ask an employment advocate to speak up for you

An employment advocate can help with things that stop you from working

An employment advocate can help make things at work better

An employment advocate can help you try new things for work

An employment advocate can not help you get a new job

An employment advocate can help you get the right work support

You do not have to pay to get an employment advocate

You do not need NDIS to get employment advocacy

Employment advocates from Side By Side Advocacy can help people with work issues in NSW

Employment advocates from other organisations can help with work issues in other places

We are all part of the Supported Employment Advocacy Project
